EXPECTANCY

Another graduation—
To some, no more;
To us, the opening
Of life's vast door.
Our last bright spark of childhood
Slowly dies—
Head bared, we stand to meet
A new sunrise.

TO THE GRADUATES

Leaving behind us a host of friends and taking away fond memories, we, members of the graduating class, are prepared to adventure beyond the massive portals of our school.

During the three years that we have made Technical our home we have gained something which we cannot express. It is this that Mr. Welty has put into words for us. We shall do our best to make Technical proud of us always.

—The Editor

THREE years ago you came to Technical, eager to choose and follow the alluring pathways to knowledge and power that were opening before you. Technical welcomed you with confidence and affection, feeling in her heart that you would aspire and achieve, and go forth with clearer vision and deeper understanding.

What have these years given to you? If they have given you tolerance, sympathy, and understanding you will merit esteem. If they have given you command of yourself and the respect of your fellows you will have influence. If they have given you the spirit of loyalty, cooperation and service you will have happiness. If they have given you courage, steadfast purpose, and high ideals you will have success. If they have given you esteem and influence among your associates, happiness and success in your endeavor, and an eager, growing knowledge of the world about you, you will have power. Devote that power to the common good and you will be sons and daughters of whom Technical may indeed be proud.

HOWARD O. WELTY.

MEMORY SKETCHES

THROUGH graying streaks of wind-curved rain, stern and aloof to the assault of the storm, ten shallow, widely-built stairs lead to the heavy doors of Technical. Scampering raindrops, not unlike fat, squirming goblins, splash and slide joyously to form widening pools on the walk. Stray students, garbed in galoshes and raincoats, and with umbrellas that fight to hold their own against the storm, are swept up the broad walk, like crisp autumn leaves, frisked about by the wind. The lawns are flattened, the corners flooded over by muddy water, and the firs at either end are myriads of tiny cold raindrops, blown carelessly against the boughs, shaking and slipping with each new downpour . . .

« « » »

Wildly cheering rooters below the bright Technical banner, throats throbbing, faces glowing; taut players, shift to the right, the ball snapped, then the final glory of a touchdown; an injured player, face wrenched with pain, rooters shouting out his name; the band, instruments gleaming in the sun, brown uniforms dark against white middies and shirts—the thrill of a team pushing on to victory . . .

« « » »

Walking from one end of Tech's hallways to the other, one hears the staccato click of typewriter keys, voices from history and mathematic classes, the quiet hum peculiar to the library, the business-like undertone of the offices, the noisy jumble of newspaper sounds from the Scribe headquarters, the blending of tones descending from the glee rooms, all mingled together. One's footfalls on the rubbery floors echo up and down the empty corridors, that are soon to be thronged with pushing, surging students, shouts of "hello" to friends, faces responding in quick smiles . . .

« « » »

Flashing sabres, shining buttons; barked commands, companies with straight lines passing in review; the slap of well-polished slings against glossy rifles; low voices of the officers asking questions and eager voices of cadets answering; cadets under the directions of non-coms marching back to the armory; the crash of bolts as the companies inspect arms; the command "Dismissed," and the cheers of cadets relieved of the pressure of being at attention; the parade is over . . .

« « » »

Two stone benches, inviting and cool under shade trees; the parade ground, marching columns, even, khaki; flowering peach trees, blazes of clustered blossoms; powdery yellow acacia, peppery in odor; the steady clamor of machines in the shops; carefully planted shrubberies; lacy pattern laid on the marble lobby floor by sun and ironed-crossed doors —all are part of the campus we will never forget . . .

And so a door
has opened wide
And stands flung back . . .

FROM A SENIOR'S DIARY

IT'S RATHER nice to be young. Life is suddenly very important and very thrilling. At the Senior Banquet it occurred to me that I really am leaving school, and all its cloistered security, and I felt awfully aged and decrepit, and wept loudly for my vanishing youth and for all the things that must be put aside.

Funny, this business of growing up—an endless process of putting toys on the shelf, to gather dust there and be forgotten. We're constantly leaving part of ourselves behind to make room for something new. Maybe that's the only way that time really touches us. Maybe that's what growing old is. Some people grow old beautifully, because they're careful what they leave behind, and what things they make room for.

The other day I looked into the mirror and was appalled to see how old I was. "Why, I'm not a kid any more! I have to shave every other day now. (This brought a glow of manful pride.) Pretty soon I'll be raising a family and coming home from the office with a newspaper sticking out of my overcoat pocket, because almost anything can happen when you have to shave every other day ——," and for a little cherished time, looking at the Me in the mirror, the other Me felt incredibly old and wise and wanted to go about paternally patting the heads of little girls. Then in an illuminating flash, the whole thing was very, very funny, and an irrepressible something uncoiled like a spring inside me, and I laughed. I laughed at the poor, solemn pompousness of my own youth and at the reflection of myself laughing back at me, and we had a glorious, gay old time, that other Me and I.

Strangely, from out of the dust of briefly forgotten things, I recaptured a picture of another Me, a Me that was so much surer, wiser, older than I am now, having reached the transcendent cynicism which only a boy of fifteen can attain. He was paddling a canoe, this earlier Me, and seeking to impress the girl in the bow with all the wisdom and excellence of his years. He was clever and gay, this fellow, and sure and very bitter. He had lived and suffered and grown tired, and now he was very glib, and rather bored with the whole dreary business. In the middle of a most sagacious utterance, his voice, which had just reached the uncertain state, went sailing up to a shrill soprano, wavered, and slid down shakily to a rolling bass. It was a tragic moment.

And I wondered how many more times in my life I'd look into the mirror and laugh.

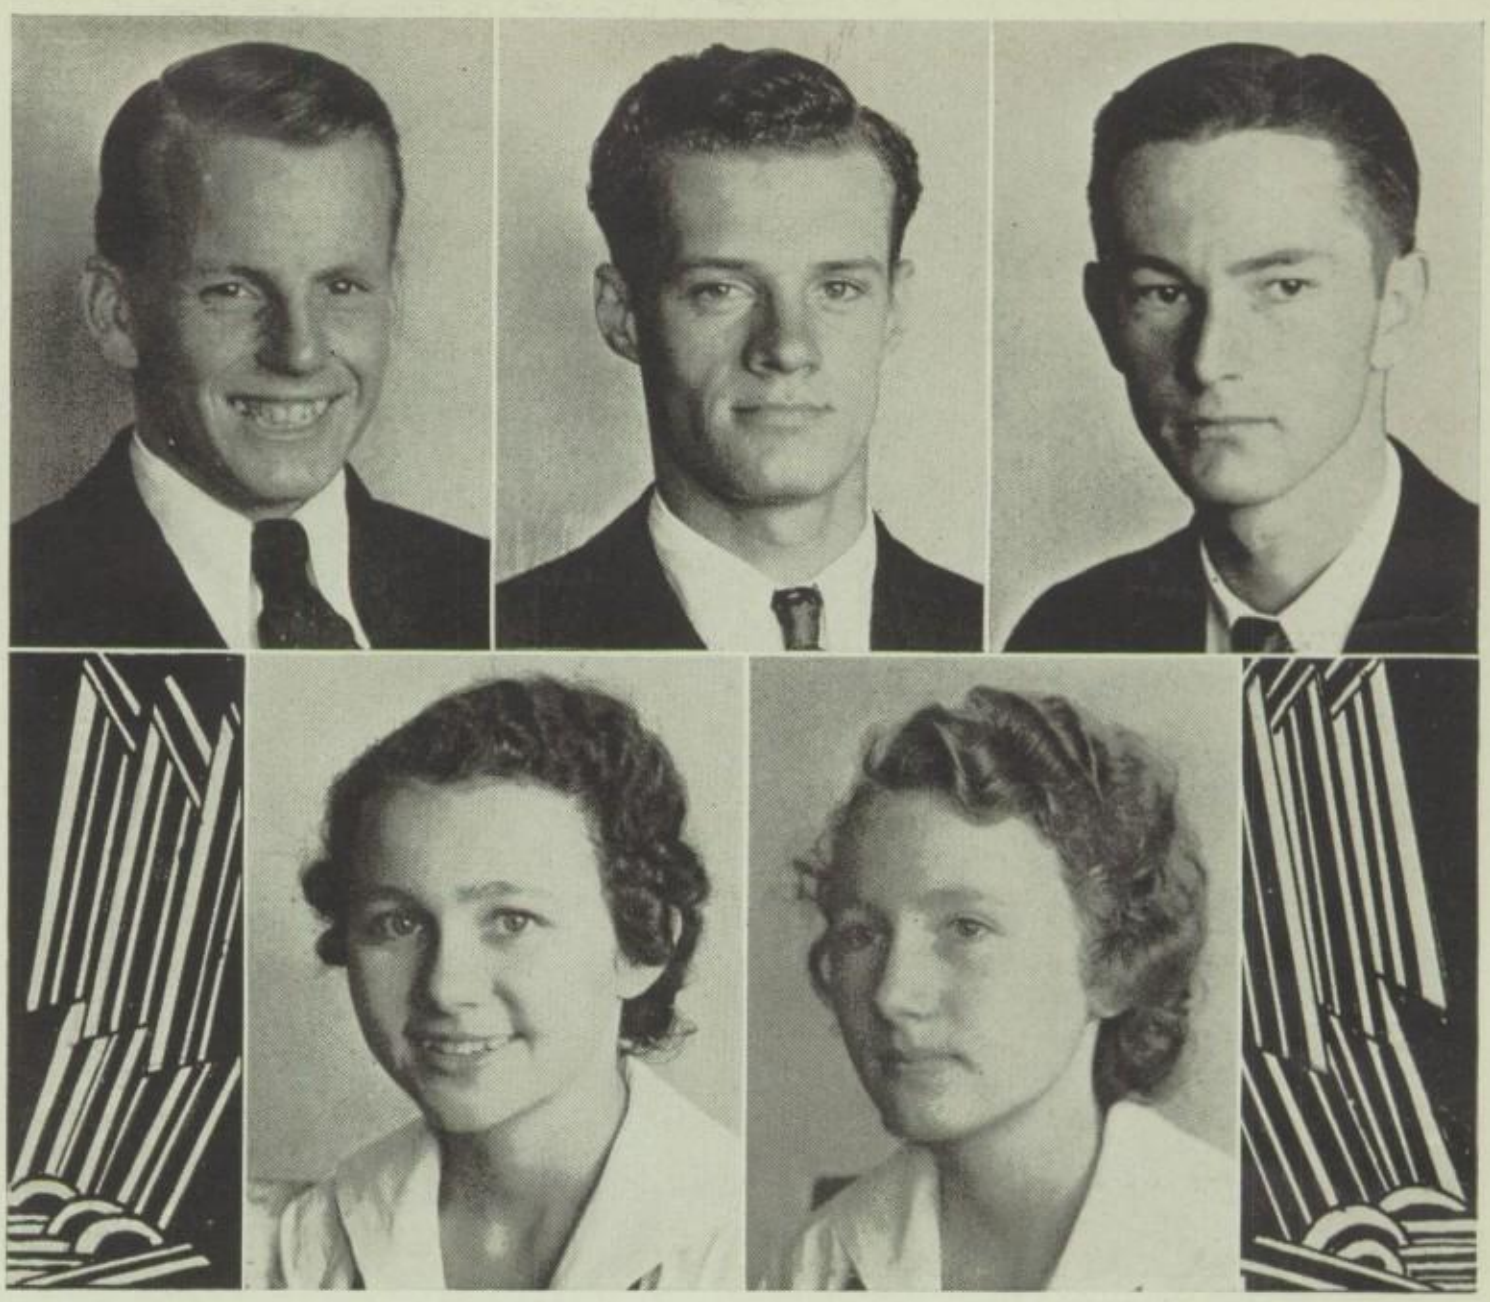
FLORICE ANDREWS



THEIR last high school term closes swiftly for the graduates of December, 1933. With the guidance of the high senior officers—Bill Harman, president; Harry Pearce, vice-president; Neal Young, boys' treasurer, and Clarice Andrews, girls' treasurer—we now culminate three pleasant years at Technical. Having left behind the semester's activities of football struggles, the Dux Dinner, Open House Night, the opera, "Pirates of Penzance," and the Senior Banquet, we arrived, jubilant, at Senior Day. Fast upon each other came the Senior Tea, Farewell Dance, Senior Assembly and the awarding of the Citizenship Cup, all leading to the grand climax of graduation night.

SENIOR CIRCUIT

NOW that we're graduating and probably won't be hanging around the beloved Chem. labs, 'n the Little Theater, 'n the publications room, 'n McMaster's office anymore, we might as well own up that we were Sophomores—in fact, the best cargo of Sophomores ever shipped into Technical—'way back in January, 1931. Awed by tales of the elevators and the swimming pool, we proved to be quite the dearest little scrubs to upper classmen.

But, somehow we skimmed through geometry, and, thoroughly in love with Tech, we began to show off in our junior year as we found ourselves in the swing of student activities. With Alma London, class president in the fall of 1932, we participated in Junior Day, held minor parts in the opera, "Bells of Capistrano," and in the production of "Hamlet." Ruth File and Graham Judge headed the Alpha Society, Junior honor club, which has since been disbanded.

Although deep in studies, we were definitely attached to school interests by our low senior term; Alma London, as Commissioner of Honor Activities, was our only representative on the Executive Board. Helen Rognas for her art work, and Walter Wright for an original play, won recognition in the Scholastic National High School Awards in March. Our class officers that term were Leonard Gabrielson, Wayne Thompson, and Norman Schlegal. Then the June graduates carried away their sheepskins, leaving the building clear for our supremacy.

With only seventeen weeks to be high seniors, still we accomplished much, placing Bill Harman as our prexy, and enjoying to its fullest measure our last term. Action was our theme. So what? So the High Senior football squad broke the tie jinx of the past two years. Under Captain Graham Judge, Coach Orville Peterson, and Manager Lawrence O'Driscoll the boys came through with a 6-0 victory over the Lows in the annual Senior Day grid tilt. Alfred Perlin, Lucretia Novak, Alma London, and Jim Allen with their committees, combined to put over farewell senior activities deserving of the praise and thanks of their classmates.

To Technical, in token of its kindly care, its encouragement, and its many friendships the class leaves a fund for improvements of the Little Theater and the stage of the main auditorium. The empty-in-the-stomach feeling common just before report cards we bequeath to the oncoming High Senior class. Being generous, we throw in, also, the rare thrill of an unexpected "A". And to our teachers we leave our chewing gum (slightly worse for wear) and our flunked tests—to remember us by. (To the next editor of Senior Memories lilies and an epitaph!)

For the last time as the class of December, 1933, we have played, and dined, and danced together. Joyful to have reached our goal, yet regretful to leave behind the happy days spent here, we pause in a last salutation, "Hail, all hail!" to Technical High School.

We stand to meet
A new sunrise!

DECEMBER ... 1933

A FLASH LIGHT OF FALL SPORTS

THIS term saw a Tech football team which seemed destined to decorate the cellar position in the O. A. L. standings, rise in the final weeks of the season to capture fifth place away from her ancient rival, McClymonds. The rapid gain in games won may be attributed to the fine show of fight and team spirit.

Practice season opened with a 13-6 win over a weak Pittsburg team, followed by a convincing 12-0 win by the Berkeley Yellowjackets, their seventh in a row against the Bulldogs. Meeting their three greatest rivals in the O. A. L.—Oakland, University, and Mack — in the opening tilts, the Broadwayans took three on the chin, going down for the count 19-0, 7-0, 13-7.

A buoying up of spirits came with a scoreless tie, when the Purple and Gold met an inoffensive team from San Leandro. The move gathered impetus with a crushing 19-0 win over Crusaders from Castlemont and a 12-0 victory over a highly-favored Roosevelt team. Another surprise followed, when the second-place Fremonters were held to a no-point tie.

In the East-West game Tech and San Leandro combined to put over the most thrilling and well-played quarter of the day, each team scoring once. Tech was given no support from the West, and the East subsequently won out, 20-7.

Among players receiving acclaim throughout the city were Captain Graham Judge, Julius Squarzino, Bill Matheson, Louis Repetto, and Mario Maccario. Coach Leroy Sharp, pleased with the spirit of this year's team, has a fine bunch left to go out after a possible O. A. L. championship next fall.

At the beginning of the basketball season Coach Al Kyte found many promising hoopsters who should come close to winning a peg for the war club. Kyte will probably look to Fulmer, Bradshaw, Doran, Anticivich, Elmore, Spector, and Basso for most of the hard work this term. The squad, which is small, should be one of the fastest in the League.

R.O.T.C. MANEUVERS

THE TECHNICAL BATTALION, commanded by Cadet Lieutenant-Colonel Harrison Rowe, finishes a successful semester of training and varied activities. Officers for this term, besides Lieutenant-Colonel Rowe, are: Cadet Major Bill Smith; Cadet Captains, Jim Martin, Harry Dodson, Harrold Russell, Elick Williams, Gilbert Laing, and Russell Hill; Cadet First Lieutenants, Dick Greyson, Dan Bonsack, Norman Herkingham, and Clifford Ommert; Cadet Second Lieutenants, Bruce Nelson, Don Lehman, Ray Behneman, Dan Lange, and Leslie Blake.

With Lieutenant Greyson leading, the Tech band won the Armistice Day competition, although the unit itself placed third. Cadet Captain Russell headed the rifle team. Capt. Harrold Russell.

A special drill platoon, organized by Lieutenant-Colonel Rowe, visited various junior high schools to show the graduating classes how the R.O.T.C. performs.

I'm glad I didn't write this earlier because I might have been insincere and I thought -
I realize now how much
I'd valued your letter every friendship - & I hope this is only the prelude -
